National Transitional Jobs Network Releases Best Practice Briefs on the Role of Employment in Ending Homelessness

Last year, the Butler Family Fund--whose Executive Director, Martha Toll, is a member of the Funders Together board of directors--supported the National Transitional Jobs Network (NTJN), in its launch of the Working to End Homelessness Initiative. This initiative shines light on the critical role of employment in ending homelessness and works to advance workforce solutions to ending homelessness. Drawing from its community of practice, NTJN--a clearinghouse for resources, tools, and expertise on transitional job programs--recently released a series of best practice briefs on a variety of topics such as service delivery principles and techniques, overcoming barriers to employment, and program models for those experiencing homelessness.
